

Devotional: Day 5: No Greater Love

Author: Andrew

Who can fathom such love, a love that does not hold record of wrong doing, a love that does not expect something in return?

Who can grasp the depth of this love? Who? Who?

Who can measure the width of its outer perimeter?

Who has seen the height of its limit?

Who has seen the deepest point of this love?

Is there any depth greater?

Is there ... is there?

Is there a love so great it would forsake all the wonders of heaven for you, a love so deep it would shed its divinity to rescue you, and a love that cares so much it would lower itself from a place so high, even angels don't dare touch, just so it could reside with you?

Can you think of any greater love?

Can you? Can you?

Can you think of a love so great it envelopes everything around it; a love so intoxicating that nothing it touches remains in doubt it is loved, and a love so pure everything which is good stems from it.

Can you think of a love so giving it overwhelms you with its goodness, a treasure you can never repay?

Can you see such love?

Can you? Can you?

Can you see a love so great, it shines even in the darkest corners of life?

Can you see a love so kind it offers you hope, even in your darkest moment of despair? A love so warm, it envelops you with a sense of well being, even in your greatest pain?

Can you experience such love?

Can you ... Can you?

Can you experience a love so selfless it will love you, even when you are selfish, a love which loves you, even when you don't love back; a love that gives ... gives ... gives ... gives... and keeps giving: hope and faith, even when you have given up on yourself.

Can you experience a love so high it will lift you up, even when you are drowning in confusion and sinking in the mud of despair, a love so strong even when you fall and are trampled on, it is there to lift you up.

Can you experience a love so patient that even our slanderous words do not keep it from loving us?

Can you experience a love so faithful that even when you do wrong it still does not stop loving you?

Is there such love? Is there? Is there?

Is there a love so merciful, it will reach down to pull us free from the dark gutter of our self-absorbed destructive lives? A love so selfless t it clothes us with its precious priceless robe in exchange for our stinking rags.

Is there a love so giving even when you are miles apart, it will choose to bridge the gap by laying itself down, bearing the cross so you can be together.

Is there a love so strong that even death would not be able to contain it and keep it away from you?
Is there a love so forgiving, that even your faults, and deepest secrets you won't tell anyone else, does not stop it from loving you?

Where can you find such love?

Where? Where?

Jesus.
